Autocycle Manufacturers

Most manufacturers of autocycles were also motor cycle builders, some of the better-known being: James, Norman, Rudge, New Hudson, Raynal, Francis-Barnett and Excelsior.

VéloSoleX

Sometimes classified as an autocycle and sometimes as a cyclemotor; the VéloSoleX, with its engine above the front wheel, is the second most popular motor cycle of all time; it has been in production for more than 70 years.

Moped Manufacturers

Introduced from Europe during the 1950s, machines such as the NSU Quickly and Mobylette were quick to catch on. British makers like Norman, Phillips and Raleigh were soon building their own mopeds to compete. There were very many different makes of moped produced during the 1950s and 1960s although many of them used the same engines such as Sachs, Jlo and Rex. The 1970s saw an influx of machines from Japan and the rise of the 'Sixteener Special' sports moped. The Yamaha FS1E (or 'Fizzy') is the one most people remember best but the most stylish machines of this period were European, like Malaguti or Gitane-Testi. Utility machines were still produced, often in Eastern Europe - Jawa and Tomos are examples, along with the British NVT Easy Rider. Nowadays, the moped is as popular as ever; the market is now dominated by under-50cc scooters.
